

Your GDPR Website Checklist

We have updated our privacy policy

We have added concise and transparent information about what personal data we collect through our website, what we use this data for, how we store it securely and for how long for, and which third parties we share this data with.

We have deleted all data we no longer require

We have removed all personal data stored in lists on our website that we either no longer need or no longer have valid reason to keep.

We have made the purpose of our website forms explicit

We have clearly stated in the copy above or next to our enquiry forms that by filling out the form, visitors can expect to be contacted by a member of our team with more information.

We have removed unnecessary fields from our website forms

We have updated all website forms to only include essential fields in order to avoid the collection of any personal data we do not need.

We have added checkboxes for consent when collecting data for marketing purposes

We have made it possible for visitors to consent to being marketed to by adding checkboxes to every form on our website being used to collect data for this purpose.

We have reviewed our blog comments

We have removed all comments stored on our website that cannot be published on the blog because they contain contact details left by prospective customers.

We have removed all client testimonials we do not have permission to use

We have taken all testimonial quotes off our website for which we do not have explicit consent from the client to display their name and business alongside their review.

We have checked our third party providers are compliant

We have identified every third party service we are collecting or sharing data with through our website and have confirmed that these will be GDPR compliant by 25th May 2018.
